Morganite, also known as "Pink Beryl," "Rose Beryl," "Pink Emerald," and "Cesian Beryl," is a rare light pink to rose-colored gem-quality variety of the mineral beryl (Be₃Al₂(SiO₃)₆). Many sources attribute morganite's color to the element manganese in interstitial sites in the beryl's ring structure. Morganite is much rarer than other common beryls, such as aquamarine and heliodor. Its value is influenced by demand, and is generally less well known than aquamarine and emerald.
